We know that for some people, it takes a bit of encouragement to learn about color, how to use it, and what colors really represent or what colors we will use to color our artwork. I started my color journey around 14 or 15 years old, and I can remember the excitement of discovering that I had colorful emotions in my own artwork. It really was all about me and my feelings, but at the same time, it was also about the work that I was doing and the challenges that I had to overcome to color my picture well. There are so many great ways to learn about colors and the different types of color families.

Here are some of my favorites: Colors That Are Saturated and Strong Sometimes we don't realize that we can take advantage of some of the strongest colors that we can use, and that can be so much fun to discover. I love using rich, saturated blues and greens, and I think that it's really about those colors that open up so many opportunities in our art. Don't be afraid to use these colors, but remember that some of them can make your work look very heavy or even dark. Colors That Are Open Often times, the things that we are afraid to do may be our best work. If we are afraid to use dark colors or use too much color, then maybe we need to experiment and see what happens. You will most certainly find yourself with some strong and wonderful art that was created without any fear at all. The best part is that you will learn about your own personal preferences as you go, and that's the best part of learning about color. If you're afraid of it, you'll find a way to create something that you are happy with. What are some of the colors that you really love? Share some of your colors with us in the comments.
